Coverdell Fellows at Clark University’s Graduate School of Management

Clark University’s Graduate School of Management is proud to participate in Peace Corps’ Paul D. Coverdell Fellows Program. Established in 1985, the Coverdell Fellows Program (formally known as Fellows/USA) is a partnership between the Peace Corps and selected graduate schools across the country. Volunteers who satisfactorily completed Peace Corps service have lifetime eligibility.

Financial Aid for RPCVs

The Coverdell Fellows Program is reserved exclusively for RPCVs. If accepted, Fellows receive a 50% or more tuition scholarship to the MBA program ($30,000 value or more); scholarship amounts will increase based on the strength of the application. Fellows will also be considered for a paid assistantship. The application fee is waived for Fellows.

Community Service Internships

As part of the Coverdell Fellows Program, all Fellows participate in supervised, professional internships in underserved American communities. Fellows will work with Clark's Community Engagement and Volunteering Center to be placed in a volunteer position with a local organization that works to improve our community. Fellows will work on strategic planning and other capacity building initiatives which will make a tremendous impact on these organizations and in turn the Worcester community.

Fields of Study

Clark University’s Graduate School of Management offers a variety of graduate business degrees:

- MBA
- MBA in Social Change
- MBA/MA in Community Development and Planning
- MBA/MA in Environmental Science and Policy
- Master of Science in Finance (MSF)

MBA in Social Change students combine their business studies with courses offered in Clark’s renowned International Development, Community and Environment (IDCE) department that focus on topics including social entrepreneurship, environmental sustainability, community development and international development. Graduates are prepared to lead in a diverse range of fields, from microfinance and ethical investing to sustainable development and corporate social responsibility. Dual-degree MBA/MA in Community Development & Planning and MBA/MA in Environmental Science & Policy programs are also offered in combination with the IDCE department.

For students interested in more traditional business disciplines, MBA concentrations are also offered in Accounting, Finance, Global Business, Management Information Systems, General Management, and Marketing.
