The LEEP Center
Michelle Bata
February 2014

Select One of the Five LEEP Learning Outcome Sets and Note It Here: Writing as a form of self-expression
The writing goal for the LEEP Center will be to have students learn about and master different types of writing for different audiences. Writing samples from the student will be evaluated.

[Table]

Select One of the Five LEEP Learning Outcome Sets and Note It Here: Collaboration to form connections and community
The collaboration goal for the LEEP Center will be to have students work together and develop their leadership skills. Students’ own reflections (and possibly supervisor evaluations) will be evaluated.

[Table]

The LEEP Center and the LEEP learning outcomes
Unlike the academic departments, LEEP Center-related programs cannot really design and structure courses and assignments to expose students to the LEEP LOs. Instead, we can guide students to opportunities (and structure the processes associated with these opportunities) through which they may—or may not—encounter these outcomes. Thus, in most cases, we will be relying on the student’s own reflections, and possibly supervisor evaluations for some, as the sources that will be evaluated.

Additionally, the staff in the LEEP Center will—eventually—advise students on their individual progress towards achieving the LEEP LOs.

*The exception, perhaps, is the case of the writing outcome, for which we will be able to use samples of the student’s own work.