An Overview

Urbanization has been one of the most powerful processes shaping American life. More than three-quarters of the U.S. population is currently classified as urban, suggesting that in many ways understanding contemporary America requires understanding cities—the broad patterns and notable variations in their growth, decline, and in some cases, revitalization. The urban development and social change concentration provides students majoring in any field with a structured program of study that enables them to understand the historical, social, economic and political factors that have shaped U.S. cities and how cities have, in turn, affected the lives of their inhabitants.

The study of urban development and social change is made all the more significant since more than half of the world’s population will soon be living in cities, and urbanization will undoubtedly be one of the key forces influencing life in the 21st century.

Eligibility

The UDSC concentration is open to students in Program Guide to the UDSC Concentration @ Clark University

An Overview

Urbanization has been one of the most powerful processes shaping American life. More than three-quarters of the U.S. population is currently classified as urban, suggesting that in many ways understanding contemporary America requires understanding cities—the broad patterns and notable variations in their growth, decline, and in some cases, revitalization. The urban development and social change concentration provides students majoring in any field with a structured program of study that enables them to understand the historical, social, economic and political factors that have shaped U.S. cities and how cities have, in turn, affected the lives of their inhabitants. The study of urban development and social change is made all the more significant since more than half of the world’s population lives in cities, and urbanization will undoubtedly be one of the key forces influencing life in the 21st century.

Eligibility and Compatibility

The UDSC concentration is open to students in all majors. Urban issues span across a broad range of subjects, making the UDSC concentration as beneficial to a Biology major as it is to a Political Science major. Many students majoring in the social sciences find the UDSC concentration to be particularly compatible with their majors, since it offers in-depth focus on social science issues relating to urban processes and places.

What makes UDSC at Clark so unique?

Clark’s location in central Worcester offers a wonderful laboratory for urban study. The UDSC concentration enables students to take advantage of distinctive opportunities available through the university’s locality, through the University Park Partnership (UPP), and through Clark’s connections with government agencies, businesses, and community organizations. Students combine challenging intellectual pursuits with hands-on research and internships in the Worcester community. This program’s participating faculty includes outstanding scholars with extensive experience in urban studies.
The University Park Partnership (UPP)

The University Park Partnership (UPP) is an urban development grassroots organization aimed at revitalizing the Main South neighborhood. Clark’s continuing involvement in UPP provides students with a broad range of volunteer, internship, and research opportunities with a focus on social activism in the community.

If you are interested in selecting the UDSC concentration, the first step would be to meet with one of the UDSC core faculty advisors:

CAREER AND SUMMER RESEARCH OPPORTUNITIES

Summer Research

UDSC offers summer research fellowships to eligible applicants, which allow the students to work on individual research projects in Main South, Southern Worcester, and other inner city neighborhoods. Students work closely with faculty and often graduate students, and receive a $2,800 stipend for their work, made possible by a generous gift from Lois and Robert Green. UDSC summer interns are encouraged to work with a Worcester City Counselor or a local development agency on a variety of projects and activities. For more information on the USDC summer research fellowship, visit:

Graduate Study & Career Preparation

The UDSC concentration will help you prepare for graduate study and jobs in fields such as urban and regional planning, community development, public administration, urban education, social work, and public policy. The concentration is particularly well suited to prepare students for entry into Clark’s M.A. program in Community Development and Planning.
CONCENTRATION REQUIREMENTS

- Students must take a minimum of seven courses in the concentration, including the capstone project.
- The seven courses must come from three or more different departments.
- One course, which should be taken at the outset, must be an Introductory Course (see Group A).
- One course must be an Urban Research Tools & Practice course (see Group B). It is recommended that this course should be taken as early as possible in the concentration.
- At least four additional courses must have a focus on U.S. cities (see Group C). Of these four courses, at least two must be at the 200 level.
- One of the seven courses may have a non-U.S., international, or comparative focus (see Group D).
- One of the seven courses must include a culminating capstone experience, consisting of a research project or internship. This may be done as part of an urban-research or internship seminar, or as a directed project supervised by a core faculty advisor or participating faculty member in the UDSC concentration.
- No more than two courses in the concentration can also be used to satisfy the requirements of a major, minor, or other concentration; though this limit does not apply to courses required for the major.

Courses listed under more than one category may only be counted once for a single category. Students pursuing the UDSC concentration will receive advice from one of the core faculty advisors on selecting appropriate courses for the concentration.
